It is in a region where moorshiners have long been supreme. The room oc-cupied by himself and his bride was forcibly entered by a half dozen masked men, a portion of whom forcibly anbjugated him, while the others, after going through his clothing and relieving him of all of his valuables, forced Mrs. Buns to dress and accompany them from the

Buns, after the disappearance of his wife, was blindfolded and led into the woods, where he was left to make his way the best he could, after being warned that it would be best to keep a still tongue regarding the incident.

In spits of this warning, the frantic husband hunted about the neighborhood for three days, in hopes of learning something regarding the whereabouts of his wife. He was, however, finally discovered by the mountaineers, who told him that his wife would be sllowed to meet him at Lady Oreek Branch at sundown of that day. Buns waited at the appointed rendezvous all night, but his wife did not appear.

A posse has gove to the mountains for the purpose of effecting a rescue of the young woman.
